

Digital Television copyright protection by means of copyright protection circuitry is a completely unacceptable and unreasonable measure. High Definition Televisions cost thousands of dollars and no law should simply declare that things people saved up quite a bit of money for are not obsolete and must be replaced. The circuitry will undoubtedly be worked around in very little time, but the time and effort that consumers have to waste to comply with this act will not be returned. Please do not make the mistake of mandating Digital Television copyright protection.
